PANEL TITLE: BRIDGING THE GENDER GAP THROUGH FINANCIAL INCLUSION

CONVENOR: SINGH NEETU

ABSTRACT

In India, gender inequality primarily affects women. Studies in the field of gender anthropology mostly focus on women. Women's empowerment is a radical strategy that aims to change power dynamics in favour of the female gender and is seen as crucial to global advancement. Over the world, financial inclusion is seen as a crucial indication of societal growth and wellbeing. Planned Panel is related to sociology of gender and gender anthropology. Throughout the past several decades, gender studies have dominated all of anthropology's subfields. Cultural anthropologists have shown that gender must be considered if cultural variance is to be properly explained (e.g. - Ortner and Whitehead 1981; Reiter 1975). The G-20 nations have placed a strong emphasis on financial inclusion as a tool for achieving other sustainable development goals, such as gender equality. Gender equality does not suggest that men and women are on an equal footing; rather, it ensures that everyone has access to the same opportunities, resources, and rewards. The proposed organization will investigate the social, political, and financial aspects of women & empowerment. It also analyses gender-related research to identify what sorts of social status changes might come from financial inclusion.
